Skadi, pronounced 'Scotty,' means the Norse goddess of winter. This celebration of women coming together to enjoy all that the mountain and village have to offer will be held during Martin Luther King Jr. weekend, January 13-14, 2018. This marks Skadi Vail's first event to be held during a weekend period.

Wake up Sunday, January 14, with yoga and, visit the vendor village to demo gear, and round out the weekend with a one-of-a-kind après ski event.

"What we didn't struggle to find time for was sharing experiences, swapping stories of what we're working on in our skiing and in our lives," said Skadi Vail participant, Heather Fried. "Conversations that showcase and strengthen the bond beyond just gender, connecting us in our mutual reverence for skiing."

Skadi Vail is an event designed by women for women. Skadi is open to any level of skier or snowboarder and is a gathering of goddesses from near and far.
